JOE PANTORNO, SPORTS EDITOR

The New York Islanders simply do not have days like they had on Thursday. For the small-market franchise that has been looked upon as outsiders in New York City, the past 30 years have been a struggle as success has been nothing but a dream. That narrative is changing, and it's changing quickly. Lou Lamoriello's arrival has sparked a culture change and suddenly, the Islanders are not only active, but making big moves, the latest coming with the hiring of Barry Trotz as their next head coach. For more on New York's newest man behind the bench, read page 15.

WELCOME TO
METRO.USMAYORS: 'TRUMP'S POLICY
CRUEL AND INHUMANE'

In a swipe at President Donald Trump's zero-tolerance immigration policy, Steve Benjamin, the mayor of Columbia, South Carolina, said Thursday that the U.S. "is not a country that stands idly by while children, babies are used as bargaining chips." Benjamin was leading a bi-partisan delegation of U.S. mayors to Tornillo, Texas, where immigrant children are being housed. On Wednesday, Trump backed down and abandoned his policy of separating immigrant children from their parents on the U.S.-Mexico border, after images of youngsters in cages sparked outrage at home and abroad. Benjamin called it "a step in the right direction" but added "it is a small one that raises as many questions as it does answers." Trump signed the order requiring immigrant families be detained together when they are caught entering the country illegally for as long as their criminal proceedings take. While that may end a policy that drew a rebuke from Pope Francis and everyone else from human rights advocates to business leaders, it may also mean immigrant children remain in custody indefinitely.

SUSPECT ARRESTED IN FLA
RAPPER SHOOTING DEATH

A man has been arrested and charged with murder in connection with the death of up-and-coming U.S. rapper XXXTentacion, who was gunned down in Florida on Monday, police said on Thursday. Dedrick Williams, 22, was taken into custody on Wednesday evening, two days after XXXTentacion, whose real name was Jahseh Dwayne Onfroy, was shot while leaving a motor sports dealership in Deerfield Beach, about 40 miles north of Miami. The death of the 20-year-old rapper stunned the hip-hop community and sparked tributes online. Two men fled the scene in a dark SUV after one of them opened fire during a possible robbery attempt, investigators had said. It was not immediately clear if police were looking for a second suspect. XXXTentacion, who was born and raised in Plantation, Florida, released his debut album in August 2017. His second album "?" debuted at No.1 on the Billboard 200 album chart when it was released in March. According to local media reports, he had spent time in jail and was awaiting trial on allegations of domestic violence against his pregnant girlfriend.

COMMENTATOR CHARLES
KRAUTHAMMER DIES

Pulitzer Prize winner Charles Krauthammer, who gave up a psychiatric career to become one of the leading conservative political commentators in the U.S. media, died on Thursday at the age of 68, the Washington Post and Fox News said. Krauthammer was a fixture on the Fox News Channel as well as on editorial pages of the Washington Post and other U.S. newspapers. His work had been curtailed since having an abdominal tumor removed last August, and in an open letter on June 8, he said doctors told him that he had only a few weeks to live due to a recurrence of the cancer. "This is the final verdict," he wrote. "My fight is over." The cause of death was cancer of the small intestine, his son, Daniel Krauthammer, told the Post. Less than a month earlier, Krauthammer had told a Fox colleague that the worst appeared to be behind him. Krauthammer, who in 1972 was left paralyzed from the neck down after a swimming pool accident while attending Harvard Medical School, was known for a dour expression, wry humor and sharp intellect. He was a regular on Fox's weeknight show "Special Report."

REPORT: BUCS QB WINSTON EXPECTS SUSPENSION

Tampa Bay Buccaneers quarterback Jameis Winston expects to be suspended for a violation of the personal conduct policy at the conclusion of the ongoing NFL investigation into an alleged incident with an Uber driver in 2016. ESPN Tallahassee radio host Jeff Cameron reported "Winston's camp" anticipates a suspension to arise from the league's probe of the alleged March 2016 incident in Arizona. Part of the reason for the punishment, per the report, is Winston failed to report the allegation to the NFL as required by the collective bargaining agreement. Also per the CBA, Winston has the right to appeal any punishment. The Buccaneers resigned Ryan Fitzpatrick, who started three games and went 2-1 last season. Fitzpatrick was added to the lineup after Winston injured his shoulder at New Orleans. Fitzpatrick finished with seven touchdowns and three interceptions in 2017. Tampa opens the season against the Saints in New Orleans before hosting Super Bowl champion Philadelphia and then facing the Pittsburgh Steelers at Raymond James Stadium.

Hanson Fitness in SoHo is offering a napercise class to help people de-stress and re-energize. PROVIDED BY HANSON FITNESS

NYC gym looks to help you sleep your way to fitness

Napercise classes aim to rejuvenate your body and reduce stress, said Hanson Fitness owner and trainer Harry Hanson.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

New York is the city that never sleeps, but that's not a very healthy lifestyle. SoHo trainer Harry Hanson is here to help, though, with a class that allows you to exercise and catch up on some ZZZ's at the same time — napercise.

Yes, you read that right: a fitness class centered around napping. Hanson Fitness, the same gym that debuted naked workouts back in January and boasts celebrity clientele like Sandra Bullock and Naomi Campbell, is offering the one-hour class at its SoHo location at 42 Wooster Street.

"If you go into a deep REM for even 20 minutes, it really helps your body recover faster, refreshes your brain and helps you be more productive," said Hanson, owner of Hanson Fitness and a personal trainer for 32 years.

Hanson's idea for a napercise class partly came from his propensity for power naps — he used to take lots of them. There were times he'd pay to go to a movie, just to crash out for 20 minutes. "It worked on me, and that's my main inspiration," he said.

Mats will be laid out on the floor, and trainers will stretch the attendees out to help them relax and loosen up their limbs.

"The focus is 100 percent relaxation," Hanson said. "While being stretched, you're completely unwinding. It's taking away all the stress of the body."

Then, the trainers will put on "spalike" relaxing music and turn off the lights. "It'll almost feel like going into a meditative state," Hanson said. Clients go to sleep for 45 minutes, then get stretched out again and go on with their day.

"Our aim with napercise is to increase alertness, remove feelings of anxiety and stress and encourage a better mood," Hanson said. Experts have also said napping helps balance hormones affected by a night of poor sleep, improves cognitive function along with other benefits.

A different napercise class did pop up in the U.K. last year, and that also inspired Hanson.

"There are so many different ways to train today; I want to stay on the forefront of that," he said. And because people tend to do different types of workouts in one week, whether spin or pilates or running, he thinks his napercise class can fit in, giving people a chance to let their bodies recover.

Hanson's next napercise class is June 22, with classes occurring every two weeks. Classes will be restricted to eight to 10 people at first, Hanson said, so that everyone's not too crowded. The cost is $40, and you can sign up by contacting Hanson Fitness online at hanson-fitness.com/soho.

Mayor Bill de Blasio and mayors from cities across the country were turned away when they attempted to visit a holding center for immigrant children in Texas on Thursday.

The mayor traveled to Tornillo, Texas, on Wednesday after touring a shelter in Harlem at which more than 200 immigrant children separated from their parents at the southern border are being housed.

The trip organized by the United States Conference of Mayors to protest the Trump administration's family-separation policy. President Donald Trump signed an executive order Wednesday afternoon that would end family separation by instead detaining children and parents together; officials did not explain what the order would do for the children already separated from their families and in holding facilities.

"The fact is this is our federal government denying access, not allowing information — and it's not American. It's crazy," de Blasio said af-

New York City first lady Chirlane McCray on Thursday went to Bellevue Hospital with other experts to talk about the physical and mental trauma that family separation could impart on these migrant children.

At least 12 children have been brought to Bellevue, officials said, because of such health issues. These children were brought in by foster families. New York City will work with foster homes and other providers to give care to the children who were sent here.

At least 12 migrant children have been brought to Bellevue Hospital because of mental trauma.

de Blasio said that he was shocked to learn that there are 239 children in New York City as a result of the Trump administration's family separation policy.

"We had gotten no notification from the U.S. government that children were being sent there from 2,000 miles away, separated from their parents, sent to some place they didn't know, no connection to," he told CNN.

"The folks who work there were trying their best to help these kids and I admire — kids are so strong and resilient, but here's the problem: They're experiencing mental health challenges and trauma because of the separation," he added. "There's also physical health challenges. The health workers there were telling us these kids, because they were held in group facilities when they came across the border, some have lice, some have bed bugs, chickenpox, all sorts of contagious situations."

Koko the Gorilla dies at 46

Koko was universally known for using sign language.

MEAGAN MORRIS
letters@metro.us

Koko the Gorilla — known for her ability to communicate with humans using over 2,000 hand signals — died Tuesday in her sleep in Woodside, California. She was 46.

"Koko touched the lives of millions as an ambassador for all gorillas and an icon for interspecies communication and empathy. She was beloved and will be deeply missed," The Gorilla Foundation said in a statement announcing her death.

Koko the Gorilla was born at the San Francisco Zoo in 1971. Animal psychologist Francine (Penny) Patterson, then studying for her Ph.D., convinced the zoo to lend her the then-infant Koko the Gorilla for research. She wanted to explore apes' ability to learn human sign language.

The pair soon bonded like "mother and daughter," Patterson once said. "You just don't expect a gorilla to be that way," she said in a 2016 BBC documentary.

Koko the Gorilla was a celebrity — and she attracted the attention from other human celebrities, like Flea from the Red Hot Chili Peppers. He gave her his bass during one visit and she attempted to play the instrument.

Her most memorable visit was with Robin Williams in 2001. Williams fearlessly interacted with the large primate, playing and laughing with her. At one point Koko the Gorilla even pulled up his shirt to play with his chest.

She was devastated after his 2014 death.

"Robin's ability to just 'hang out' with Koko, a gorilla, and in minutes become one of her closest friends, was extraordinary and unforgettable," Patterson wrote in a tribute post to Williams after he died by suicide.

"She was beloved and

The Gorilla Foundation

In 1975, the San Francisco Zoo — worried about the gorillas' place on the endangered species list — demanded that Koko the Gorilla breed or be returned to the zoo. Another ape, Michael, was brought in and also taught sign language. However, their relationship was more like siblings than mating partners. Michael passed away in 2000.

Another gorilla, Ndume, was also brought in to make Koko a mother — something she expressed wanting by signing the word for baby.

"Ndume came to live with Koko when they were both teenagers (she selected him from a video), and hence was considered a much more likely mate," the organization wrote on its website. "Although Koko and Ndume do get along very well and spend lots of time together, Koko has still not initiated mating."

Koko the Gorilla never had a baby, though she was "mother" to many kittens throughout her life. Her first, named All-Ball, died in an accident.

Patterson was adamant that Koko could interact with humans using sign language and expressed human-like emotions. She even turned away during a scene in her favorite movie because it scared her.

She also played practical jokes, once tying Patterson's shoelaces together before signing the word for "chase."

Another primate expert, Herbert Terrace, dismissed Patterson's work with Koko, claiming that she — and other primates like her — were only reacting to their human teachers. Terrace also added that Patterson refused to recognize it because she was an "overzealous mother who is very proud of her surrogate children and tends to project meanings onto those children that may not be apparent to another observer."

Patterson — who never married or had children of her own — was undeterred and cared for Koko the Gorilla like a daughter for the primate's entire life.

"The foundation will continue to honor Koko's legacy and advance our mission with ongoing projects including conservation efforts in Africa, the great ape sanctuary on Maui, and a sign language application featuring Koko for the benefit of both gorillas and children," the foundation added in a statement.

Today, we have a Grumble from reader Jane S. that is near and dear to my heart: waste and our carbon footprint. She has a lot to say, so I'll let her have the podium.

READER WRITE-INS:

DO YOUR PART TO STOP THE WASTE.

Although there are valid points made by many of you, today I grumble about a broader issue across humankind: THE WASTE. It's not flash news to anyone. The amount of waste we produce is nothing short of catastrophic. The U.S. occupies the No. 1 place in the world on trash producing per person, equaling to approximately 760 KGs per person per year, and then again is the winner for all other trash (e.g.: industrial) resulting into a whopping 236 million tons per year. Then there are all other countries. More trash! It will take all companies — globally — immediate and drastic changes to stop producing and contributing to so much waste but we, individually, can absolutely help drive that. I know it's not that simple — we're so dependent on those items (plastic is practically everywhere, highly processed toilet paper, diapers etc), but the basic concept is this: If we won't buy the items we can live without, they won't produce, or produce less. I feel inclined to state the obvious as I still see people doing it, but why can't we just all refuse plastic bags? Soft cotton bags fold tiny in a handbag/backpack or pocket, and if you forgot it, do you really need 4 plastic bags for a few products in the supermarket? Let's stop buying single use/disposable items. Those six-pack mini-yogurts? If available, buy them in larger containers (e.g. 17.6oz and up), or switch brands — is your brand that special? Consumers drive the demand, and we can drive it down, forcing companies to rethink their packaging. Let's stop buying the 0.5L bottles of water, or if really have to, buy the larger ones or ideally buy a multiuse plastic or glass bottle

Tell us what you think!

@metro newyork

we can wash and refill. Let's stop using straws, nobody will choke, I promise! Let's stop our junk mail — and sometimes it's a grand fight with the offender company! Let's stop throwing stuff away; instead, give it away (many do, I know, but not enough of us). Let's be the new owner of used items — does one really need a brand new baby stroller? Let's stop excessive use altogether. We don't need as much as we think. Come on people, it's not that hard — we can do better.

Aries Stay focused and tend to your responsibilities. If you are diligent about getting things done, you will receive the right kind of attention. Strive for perfection.

Taurus Don't go looking for trouble. Taking on too much and stressing about it will lead to discord with someone asking too much of you. Say no if demands are too great.

Gemini Creative solutions will help you bring about positive change at home and work. Your energetic input and diverse way of doing things will be praised by some and criticized by others.

Cancer If you repeatedly say what you want to do, you'll be forced to make it come true. The pressure to live up to your word can be a powerful motivator.

Leo Consider your options and put some muscle behind the choices you make. Saying is one thing, but achieving is everything. Set guidelines and stick to them. Avoid waste.

Virgo Participation will be what brings about change. Whether you are making personal changes or helping a cause, the hard work you put in will make a difference.

Libra Keep moving, as idle time will be what gets you into trouble. If you stop procrastinating and start doing, you will deter others from complaining. Improve your spending habits.

Scorpio Embrace life, and consider the best way to move forward. Changing your lifestyle or beliefs will be enlightening for you, but will probably cause a problem for someone close to you.

Sagittarius Get in the game, but don't buy your way in. Hard work, dedication and willpower, not overspending, will be your ticket to success. Walk away from anyone trying to convince you otherwise.

Capricorn Size things up and get started. You have plenty to gain if you dig in and don't stop until you are finished. Celebrate your accomplishments with someone special as the day comes to an end.

Aquarius An emotional incident will create havoc in your personal life if you overreact. Don't drown your sorrows in melodrama or indulgent habits. Make positive changes.

Pisces A change at home will improve your standard of living. Getting your house and finances in order will ease stress and encourage you to relax and have a little fun. EUGENIA LAST

J.A. Bayona wants 'Jurassic World: Fallen Kingdom' to feel small

Life, uh, always finds a way. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

The director didn't want to go big with the latest dino-filled sequel.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

When you think of the "Jurassic Park" franchise, the first word that comes to mind probably isn't small.

This is a big franchise with giant set pieces and humungous dinosaurs wreaking havoc. That's especially true for "Jurassic World: Fallen Kingdom," which has all of the above, plus an exploding volcano and even more dino-mayhem.

But taking the fifth "Jurassic Park" film into uncharted territory was always J.A. Bayona's goal, and, surprisingly, that included him repeatedly telling co-screenwriter Colin Trevorrow that he "wanted to go smaller" with "Fallen Kingdom" "instead of going big."

"Nowadays, Hollywood blockbusters are all about going more and more and more," Bayona tells Metro. "I felt that looking back at the first 'Jurassic Park,' the second half of the movie becomes more claustrophobic and suspenseful."

"I think people love to be scared by dinosaurs. So I told Colin, 'Let's get all the fireworks in the first half of the movie. Then once you have given the audience what they are looking for let's go to something they don't expect,'" he adds. "Let's try to put them into a very unexpected place. And build up the suspension in such a way that you give them a sense of fear and horror that we love from the first 'Jurassic Park.'"

Bayona is clearly beholden to the previous entries in the series, how-and used the 1993 classic as a launch pad to try something new with the "Jurassic World" sequel.

"I was always a huge fan of Steven Spielberg movies," Bayona says. "I always appreciated the way he was able to mix entertainment with important subject matters and, in that sense, 'Jurassic Park' was a reference movie for me."

"This is a movie that talks about attempting what we don't understand. I think it is very smart that the movie turns the whole dinosaur dilemma into something that affects us, in a very straight forward way," he adds. "I think the film takes a major step forward in what the 'Jurassic' universe has been showing us."

"Jurassic World: Fallen Kingdom" opens in theaters Friday, June 22.

Cheer on the marchers

The 2018 Pride Parade still begins at noon, but the route is totally different from previous years. The more than 40,000 marchers and 100 floats will step off from 16th Street and Seventh Avenue in Chelsea, march down to the West Village to pass the Stonewall Inn then turn north to end in Midtown at 29th Street and Fifth Avenue. It's a trial run for next year, when New York City will host its first-ever WorldPride, a monthlong celebration in honor of the 50th anniversary of the Stonewall Riots. And remember that the parade will go on into the evening, so plan accordingly!

Refuel with food and cocktails

Carb up post-parade at Meatpacking's new retro pizza and cocktail lounge The Woodstock spread, renamed by Rainbow Sundae for the occasion. They'll also be mixing a one-day-only special cocktail called the Unicorn Sour with vodka, white peach, ginger, lime juice and egg white, with $1 going to Planned Parenthood.

Or take in the Southern California vibes at Taco Dumbo, which has created a frozen rainbow margarita topped with cotton candy clouds. The cold-pressed juice cocktail is just $6, or get one in a larger shared size for free if you've got proof of marriage.

Keep partying into the night

Queer party pioneers Papi Juice lead a day-long party at New York Live Arts, Chelsea's theater for "innovative movement-based artistry." From 2-8 p.m., snap some glam selfies in the open-air lobby with the kaleidoscopic installation "These bags we carry are filled with promise" by Nick Cave and Bob Faust, nab some complimentary cocktails and small bites if you're early enough, and catch surprise DJ sets and drag performances. Concerts are ticketed ($20 advance, $25 door).

Tips for a great Pride Parade

Bring supplies: Last year's Pride Parade lasted for more than nine hours. It's going to be a long, sunny day out there, so bring water, sunblock, a hat and snacks to sustain your rainbow spirit.

Wear comfortable, closed-toe shoes: You want to be able to cheer on the whole parade and also keep dancing, right?

Plus, you'll be grateful when someone inevitably steps on your foot.

Pick the right viewing spot: Stand where you'll have the easiest subway access to wherever you're headed next. Or even better, make a reservation at a restaurant along the route and head there after the parade instead of fighting the crowds.

If you're not ready to take the party indoors yet, grab a frozen drink and party all day with nightlife icon Susanne Bartsch and The Dreamhouse on Brooklyn's new Elsewhere rooftop until 10 p.m., when the party heads inside to continue raging until 4 a.m. Tickets are $25-$30, with a portion going to support emerging visual artists.

And of course, the glitteriest bash will be at Bushwick's House of Yes, where you're encouraged to be as loud and proud as you want at Bad Behavior, where the dancing starts at 8 p.m. and doesn't let up until 3 a.m. Get priority entry for $10 in advance, or hope for a ticket at the door for $15.

What mysteries will finally be explained in this Sunday's season finale? ALL PHOTOS HBO

'Westworld' Season 2 is about to end, but what does it mean?

The second season of HBO's ambitious sci-fi Western concludes Sunday.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

where his path leads in the second season finale, so he's just lying. After all, considering the sheer level of secrecy HBO maintains for tentpole shows like "Westworld" and "Game of Thrones," misguiding the press and fans is all part of the plan.

And it's doing nothing to stop them, as audiences have been struggling with several questions this season. One of the biggest, following last week's penultimate "Vanishing Point," concerns whether Harris' William, better known as The Man in Black, is an android or a human.

Seeing as how we've seen him age thanks to flashbacks and time jumps, William is most likely human. However, this doesn't mean he's free of the late Dr. Robert Ford's (Anthony Hopkins) control. That's because another theory posits the so-called "door," which has served as season two's mystery box, is actually a window into Delos, Inc.'s secret attempts to collect data on park guests. Why?

So they can one day control humans just as easily (or not) as the robot hosts.

Maybe William is a host, maybe not. Maybe Delos is secretly trying to figure out how to control living and breathing people for a profit, maybe not. Or, as yet another theory ponders, maybe Bernard's (Jeffrey Wright) physical form is currently occupied by another host entirely. Either way, "Westworld" fans will find out soon enough.

Even when I watch it, there's a lot of it that I don't always understand," he told the Huffington Post last weekend. "Yeah, I have no idea where it's heading."

Or Harris might actually understand what's going on with his villainous character, and know

At some point during the first season of HBO's "Westworld," everyone involved in the heady science fiction series — showrunners, talent, critics, audiences — realized one important thing: that viewers' feverish theorizing about what was actually happening, or could happen next, would carry the show forward.

Hence why, on the eve of the Season 2 premiere in late April, showrunners Jonathan Nolan and Lisa Joy took part in a Reddit AMA, promising to divulge "Westworld" spoilers freely. Instead, they trolled everyone with a video of star Evan Rachel Wood singing a piano cover of Rick Astley's "Never Gonna Give You Up."

Gags notwithstanding, fans and critics alike have continued to pronounce, evaluate and recommit to their best "Westworld" predictions throughout much of season two's run, which comes to an end on Sunday. Not even the talent, like actor Ed Harris, can help themselves.

"Even when I watch it, there's a lot of it that I don't always understand," he told the Huffington Post last weekend. "Yeah, I have no idea where it's heading."

Or Harris might actually understand what's going on with his villainous character, and know

Isles take big step, hire Barry Trotz as next head coach

The 55-year-old is three weeks removed from winning the Stanley Cup.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The New York Islanders have just picked up their most established head coach since Al Arbour. The team announced on Thursday that they have hired Barry Trotz as their next head coach.

"Barry brings to the New York Islanders franchise a tremendous amount of knowledge, experience and success," Islanders president and acting general manager Lou Lamoriello said. "He is and has been one of the top coaches in the National Hockey League. I am excited to have the opportunity to work with him."

The 55-year-old resigned as Washington Capitals head coach on Monday shortly after winning the franchise's first-ever Stanley Cup with a five-game triumph over the expansion Vegas Golden Knights.

His future in the city was in jeopardy had he not won a Cup after three-straight 100-plus seasons and two President's Trophies failed to yield a championship, but the fourth time turned out to be a charm as the Capitals accrued 105 points and won the Metropolitan Division for a third-straight year before their run to Lord Stanley's holy grail. As Trotz hoisted the Stanley Cup, his contract was believed to have expired.

But what was unbeknownst to all was that he had a two-year extension clause that kicked in had he won a championship, which he did. It still was not enough as he is now on the cusp of his third head-coaching gig in the NHL.

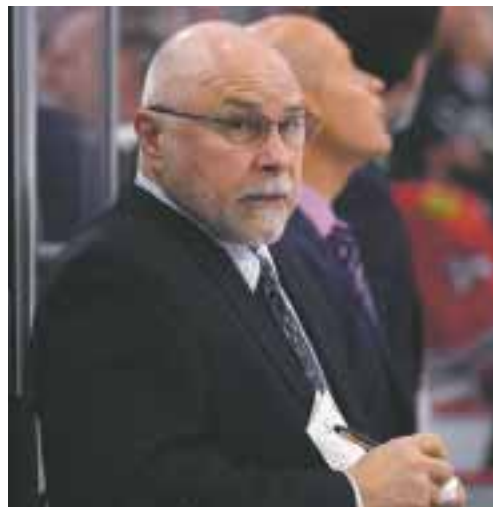

Trotz was the original head coach of the Nashville Predators from their expansion season in 1998 to 2014 before joining the Capitals. He ranks fifth on the NHL's all-time list of wins by a head coach with 762, just 20 behind the Islanders legend Arbour, who was the man behind the bench for the franchise's dynastic run of four-straight championships from 1980-1983.

This is a franchise-altering move for the Islanders made by Lou Lamoriello, who fired head coach Doug Weight and GM Garth Snow just two weeks after he was hired at the end of May.

Snow became the face of the Islanders' struggles during his 12 seasons in the front office. For a franchise mired in mediocrity for a majority of the 35 years since its Stanley Cup days, his inactivity in creating a legitimate contender around captain John Tavares saw him quickly and dramatically fall out of favor with the team and its fans over the past year. Especially when he was quiet during the 2018 trade deadline that saw him pass on acquiring a legitimate blueliner to help out the league's worst defense despite the Islanders possessing one of the NHL's top attacks.

It was clear during his year-plus stint as head

Jersey Devils, has brought a culture change to the Islanders that has not been seen by a sizeable bulk of its fan base. Instead of a team being stuck in neutral and acting like a small-market franchise, Lamoriello is now on the verge of acquiring the best head coach available on the market.

And Trotz will bring something that the Islanders have never had before in a new head coach.

Should the deal be completed, Trotz will become the first man to take the team's head coaching job with over 350 games of experience and with a Stanley Cup to his name.

Now comes the next step of securing Tavares for the rest of his career. The stability that Trotz brings though will only help that hope for the Islanders turn into a reality.

coach that Weight was not ready to carry the burden of a struggling team and adapt on the fly in order to get the most out of a roster that simply was not good enough to compete for a playoff spot.

But the hiring of the Hall-of-Famer Lamoriello, who won three Stanley Cups running the New

Knicks nab Kevin Knox at No. 9

The New York Knicks selected Kentucky forward Kevin Knox with the ninth-overall pick of the 2018 NBA Draft on Thursday night from the Barclays Center in Brooklyn.

It is the first draft pick of the Steve Mills and Scott Perry regime and it immediately fills a big-time need. After a failed experiment with putting Tim Hardaway Jr. at the 3, the Knicks will be looking at Knox to be a true replacement to Carmelo Anthony, who was traded shortly before the start of last season.

Knox had gained some serious momentum as a possible selection for the Knicks over the past few days. With others like Mikal Bridges and Michael Porter Jr. slated as favorites to be picked by New York, a strong workout left a lasting impression on the organization.

The Knicks took Kevin Knox with the ninth pick on Thursday night. GETTY IMAGES

He put up solid numbers during his lone season at Kentucky, averaging 15.6 points and 5.4 rebounds per game, but his game still has a lot of developing to do, though not as much as Ntilikina when he was drafted last year.

John Calipari, Knox's coach at Kentucky, helped build up his former player's hype by comparing him to Boston Celtics star Jayson Tatum to Newsday's Al Iannazzone.

Knox is a player who looks to drive to the hoop first, though that could change if he continues to work and perfect his jumper from deep. He already has an excellent shot from mid-range and will look to catch and shoot when given the opportunity from inside the arc.

There is always pressure when drafted by a big-market team like New York, but there will be a little more heaped on the shoulders of Knox as he is now a poster child of the new direction that the organization is moving in.

Tottenham man Christian Eriksen put the Danes on top early with a wonderful left-footed volley which looked as though it would usher in an easy victory. But the Aussies had other ideas.

A handball in the 36th minute gave Australia its second penalty in as many World Cup games. Just like in the first match against France, captain Mile Jedinak stepped up and slotted his chance past Kasper Schmeichel to ensure Australia earned a point to stay alive.

FRANCE ELIMINATES PERU

It was another less-than-convincing performance from one of the tournament favorites France.

A close-range goal from 19-year-old wonderkid Kylian Mbappe was all the hosts needed but Peru came close, including a second-half attempt from Pedro Aquino that rang off the post.

France is through to the last 16 while Peru's first World Cup since '82 is over.

CROATIA SMACKS ARGENTINA

Argentina is in a heap of trouble after getting outplayed and embarrassed by Croatia to close out Thursday's play.

A horrid mistake from goalie Willy Caballero paired with the brilliance of Luka Modric and Ivan Rakitic sealed an emphatic win for Croatia, who clinched a spot in the knockout round.

Argentina now must scramble with Nigeria left to play.
